LOVERNE.

On Tuesday and Wednesday nights, with Wednesday matinee. Al. G. Field's Minstreis (Themselves) will play at the Academy of Music, and it must be some show. Indeed, it's bound to be, for see what Mr. Field's own agent—who ought to know—says about it! Read it all; it's worth reading:

"Despite the fact that the past twenty-eight seasons have taught the public to expect from the Al. G. Field Minstreis each year a new entertainment on the most elaborate scale consistent, yet the production this season amazes by the lavishness in mountings, the captivating blend of old and new conceits in minstrelsy, and the array of talent.

"No less than four mammoth spec-tacles are presented, in addition to the other numbers, which would make up a ministrel program themselves of the highest grade."

highest grade.
"The Birth of Minstrelsy has an atmosphere of elegance and charm which bestows on minstrelsy a new and added distinction. A reproduction is enacted of the first American minstrel entertainment, and of the changes since that time. This is developed to a Colonial pleture, in which the Old and the New South are exemplified by scenes rich in pletorial quality and capitating in sentiment.
